A DEATH IN TUSCANY is the second book from former Florence police chief Michele Giuttari, billed as a bestseller in Italy and translated into nine languages. I was particularly interested to read this as the first book A FLORENTINE DEATH had a number of elements which didn't work for me. I see if this was first book syndrome or more to do with this particular author's style of storytelling.

A FLORENTINE DEATH is a pedestrain translation. There are even a few glaring grammatical errors, suggesting that English might not be the first language of the translator. When I compare Michele Giuttari's character, Chief Superintendent Ferrara, I read a large number of mystery novels in French, Italy, Sweden, Finland, and so on.

A Florentine Death (Michele Ferrara, #1) by Michele Giuttari
In a town in present-day Tuscany, the body of an unidentifiable girl, possibly no more than thirteen, is discovered. She appears to have died of a heroin overdose, though with no one reporting her missing, the possibility that she is an illegal immigrant, and one who may have been a victim of human trafficking, is not ruled out.
