Hemoglobin, or Hb, is a protein molecule found in red blood cells (erythrocytes) made of four subunits: two alpha subunits and two beta subunits (Figure 20.19). Each subunit surrounds a central heme group that contains iron and binds one oxygen molecule, allowing each hemoglobin molecule to bind four oxygen molecules. Molecules with more oxygen bound to the heme groups are brighter red.

No! It's not your fault! Dont be silly, I was just curious about seeing if any biology notes were around somewhere on here. Not to worry though as I've made a separate GoogleDocs ATAR community offline with only my access to make my own private notes which will be shared for access on a website through you guys on the 27th of June 2017 or later. (I can share with someone from StudentBox's team).
