Canadas First Nations A History

Canada's historic treatment of First Nations peoples has been oppressive, seeking to exploit their lands and eliminate their cultures. There have, however, been some improvements in, or at least acknowledgements of, the way in which First Nations peoples are treated through the Truth and Reconciliation Commission.

First Peoples Historical Overview

First Nations also used stories to describe and commit to memory their history and relationships with other peoples, to recall clans' genealogy and, of course, to tell their Creation story. They organized their gatherings during very specific times of the year, when most of the members of their community would be together, in order to pass along this knowledge to as many people as possible.
