VARIOUS ENTHALPY CHANGE DEFINITIONS
Remember, you can only calculate enthalpy of reaction changes from bond enthalpies if all the species are gaseous! (c) If the enthalpy of vapourisation of water is +40.7 kJmol<sup>-1</sup> and the enthalpy of vapourisation of cyclohexane is +30.0 kJmol<sup>-1</sup>, from your answer to (b), recalculate the enthalpy of combustion of cyclohexane.

Knowing the enthalpy changes of formation of compounds enables you to calculate the enthalpy changes in a whole host of reactions and, again, we will explore that in a bit more detail on another page. And one final comment about enthalpy changes of formation: The standard enthalpy change of formation of an element in its standard state is zero.

Definition: The enthalpy change when 1 mole of an ionic compound is formed from its gaseous ions under standard conditions. Lattice enthalpy cannot be measured because gaseous ions do not combine directly to form a compound. Born-Haber cycles . As lattice enthalpy cannot be measured, another way of working out lattice enthalpy values is needed.

Enthalpy change refers to the amount of heat released or absorbed when a chemical reaction and it is given the symbol  $\Delta H$  A reaction is exothermic when it releases energy, and  $\Delta H$  = negative. A reaction is defined endothermic when it absorbs energy, therefore the  $\Delta H$  = positive.
