Has any one got a drawing of a Fobco Star drilling a machine. I have dismantled mine and found that the top bearing (next to the pulley) is an angular type, which according to Tony@Lathes said it should be at the bottom. I would appreciate knowledgeable/help comments before reassembling the machine after a good clean up and painting. John/Ted

Dunno what the Fobco has. Second one was a fracture in the clamp region. Nicely filled and painted over by previous owner! Welding sorted that one. Time to take it apart and get the magnifying glass out. Fobco drills are generally considered very good so having the casting split for only part of its depth is unlikely to be the true cause.
