'Homage to Barcelona' by Colm Tóibín Non-fiction – paperback; Picador; 240 pages; 2010. Perhaps it's because I grew up in Australia, right at the bottom of the world, so removed from everywhere else, that I quickly developed a desire to travel and to explore and to discover new places and cultures.

This is the first of Colm Toibin's books that I have read and I'm looking forward to getting my hands on more of his work! Toibin is the first author I've read who has managed to describe the city in a way that manages to draw out the real emotion of experiences such as wandering the streets of the medieval centre, visiting old summer haunts of Picasso, or taking part in the crazy fiestas.
