Logic is a framework for understanding created beings and their doings, but God is not created. He is not finite. And He is not bound by logic. What we see as the ultimate basis of understanding is not ultimate at all. It is a created thing too. To say God is not logical isn't to say he is illogical. It is to say that God is beyond logic. He ...

The ontological argument for the existence of God refers to the claim that the very logical possibility of God's existence entails His actuality. The ontological argument begins with the claim that God, by definition, is infinitely great. Thus, no entity can surpass God's greatness.

Ontological Argument

Moreover, God teaches men whatever they know of this truth (Ps. 94:10-11). But the teaching of Genesis carefully distinguishes man the creature from God the Creator. This implies that God is the originator of mathematical truth, while man is only a recipient. God knows all mathematical truth and never errs, while man knows in part and does err.

Gödel's ontological proof is a formal argument by the mathematician Kurt Gödel (1906–1978) for the existence of God. The argument is in a line of development that goes back to Anselm of Canterbury (1033–1109). St. Anselm's ontological argument, in its most succinct form, is as follows: "God, by definition, is that for which no greater can be conceived.

Logic appears to be one of the natural laws God put into place at the creation of the universe. Then, God created mankind with a mind and the ability to reason. Being a creation of God, logic is a good thing which, when used properly, can point us toward God. Unfortunately, it is easy to use logic incorrectly.

And although we cannot see God himself, we can know that he exists with absolute certainty. Dr. E. A. Maness stated the matter correctly: "If the word 'God' were written upon every blowing leaf, embossed on every passing cloud, engraved on every granite rock, the inductive evidence of God in the world would be no stronger than it is" (The Evidence of God in an Expanding Universe , 12).
