LabLabLab: Intermolecular Forces Investigation Lesson Background. Intermolecular forces are the attractions that hold different molecules together to form solids, liquids and gases. They differ from chemical bonding (ionic and covalent) due to the energy needed to break the attraction between the molecules is less than the energy needed to break the bond between the atoms.

Examining the Strength of Intermolecular Forces of ...

The introductory videos and accompanying text will give students a brief summary of the different intermolecular forces, including whether they occur in polar or non-polar molecules and their relative strengths, but it will probably be most beneficial if students have been introduced to the concepts of intermolecular forces, molecular geometry, and molecular polarity prior to using this ...
