Marx's Theory of Historical Materialism

Marx knew that revolutionaries needed a new theory of history. So he took the best theory of history then available, that of Hegel, and he stood it on its head. The result was a new theory of history as summarized by Marx in his preface to A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy written in 1859.

Karl Marx's Theory of History - Wikipedia

As Marx nowhere laid out his theory of history systematically, this is partly an effort to synthesize diverse writings to present a coherent theory. This is simultaneously also an effort to modernize Marx by stripping away some of the more obscure features of Marx's thought such as the use of "dialectic" and some of more cloudy Hegelian teleology.
