How to Listen to Pain | Greater Good
The first step that led to my commitment to listen to the pain of others came when no one would listen to my pain. It was in the summer of 1993 when I was called into the office of the President of Messiah College (PA) and was told that my services as Vice President for Academic Affairs were terminated immediately because of my "lack of deference to the President and Board of ...

I'm passionate about helping women learn to love their bodies, and learning to listen to your body is a crucial step. If you struggle with how to listen to your body, you most likely also struggle to listen to your emotions. The two are forever interconnected, since emotions are physical (you feel them in your body), and when we block one out we tend to block out the other.
