To ensure its survival, humankind need not merely master the galaxy but also the flow of time itself. Manifold: Time's would-be asteroid-miner-in-chief is bootstrap space entrepreneur Reid Malenfant, a media-savvy firebrand who's showed those crotchety NASA folks what's what with his ready-to-fly Big Dumb Booster, piloted by a genetically enhanced super-squid. But Malenfant's near-term plans to exploit the asteroids get diverted when he crosses paths with creepy mathematician and ...

Stephen Baxter's Manifold novels have struck the world of science fiction like a meteor. Heralded by Arthur Clark as "a major new talent," Baxter stands time and space on their collective heads, envisions the future reflected in the past, and the past in the galaxy's most distant reaches and unformed speculations.

Stephen Baxter - Didn't enjoy Manifold Time, want to try another. Muscled through Manifold:Time and didn't enjoy much. I didn't really like the characters too much- seemed thin. And for whatever reason, plot didn't grab me as much as I thought, felt like science class. But, I'd like to try another one as his ideas are intriguing.

Manifold Time 1 Stephen Baxter

Manifold: Time is the epitome of a Baxter three-star effort: some mind-bending ideas about the cosmos, a plot, some classroom lessons, some bad exposition of facts and some cardboard characters. That being said, I have enjoyed three of the four Baxter novels I've read to date, including this one.
