Diffusion scatters light. Tip: Materials such as translucent plastic or white fabric can be used to diffuse a harsh light source.
You can place a diffuser in front of an artificial light, such as a strobe. Or, if you're in bright sun, use a light tent or white scrim to soften the light falling on your subject.

The further your subject is from a light source, the dimmer the lighting will be. In fact, light falls off very quickly as it's moved away - at a rate of the square of the distance. That means that if the light source is moved twice as far away, you get just one-fourth of the light you originally had.
