Buddhist Beliefs - ReligionFacts

Buddhism is sometimes called an "atheistic" religion, although some of us prefer "non-theistic"--meaning that believing in a God or gods really isn't the point. But it's certainly the case that there are all kinds of god-like creatures and beings called devas populating the early scriptures of Buddhism.

The concepts of punishment, penance, and forgiveness are central themes in Christianity and throughout Western cultures. So many people initially view Buddhism through this narrow context of preconceived notions. While the basis of many religions is a god, or deity, it can be said that the major focus of Buddhism is the mind, or consciousness.

However, Buddhism now appears to be losing standing in Japan. Ryoko Mori, the chief priest at the 700-year-old Zuikoji Temple in northern Japan said: "In Islam or Christianity, they hold sermons on spiritual matters. But in Japan nowadays, very few Buddhist priests do that. If Japanese Buddhism doesn't act now, it will die out.
