Beneath The Oaks

Because my house was built in the 60's I knew there was a 75% chance that the stairs would be Oak just like the floors throughout the house. I was right. There truly were Oak Hardwood treads under that dreaded carpet. If I had known that, I would have pulled that carpet up a year ago.

What lies beneath...the carpeted stairs that is.

The property is home to hundreds of massive Texas oak trees, a pecan and olive orchard, a grape vineyard, and a privately owned turf farm, guaranteeing that the landscaping is always impeccable. We are family owned and operated, this property has been in our family for 30+ years, and we are so happy it's beauty is now bringing joy and love into other peoples lives.

RENEGADE GARDENER The lone voice of horticultural reason "Trees roots can grow into a house foundation and cause damage." With some frequency I encounter homeowners concerned because a mature tree on their property was planted quite close to the house (usually by a previous owner). They are worried that the tree's roots are going to grow into the foundation and cause it to buckle or crack ...
