The Sales Paradox: Stop Selling to Sell. Exceptional sales professionals think like doctors -- they diagnose problems before presenting solutions that could cure what ails their customers. Let's face it, most sales are getting more complex and commoditization is running rampant.

The Salesperson Paradox: A Strikingly Simple Way to ...

The salesperson paradox directs performance. To improve selling performance you have to move away from selling into helping. It is centered on the customer. Doug contrasts that with self-centeredness. Humans are innately self-centered but focusing on your own needs doesn't serve the customer. Helping needs to be your first goal. The successful sales path is: help the customer, then make quota, then make money.
